The seal of the University of Guam is a circular emblem. It features a central figure holding a torch, with a banner below it. The words "UNIVERSITY OF GUAM" are inscribed along the top inner edge, and "EXCELSIOR" is inscribed along the bottom inner edge. The year "1948" is visible on the left and right sides of the seal.

“The campus of the University of Guam is situated on a high, palm-studded plateau overlooking picturesque Pago Bay on the eastern side of the island of Guam. It is situated on one of the most beautiful sites of the island, bounded by the tide and beaches of the ocean on one side and the green foliage of the tropical island on the other.”

The Society of Emeritus Professors and Retired Scholars is proud to present the University of Guam with this report which documents the University of Guam's development throughout the decades. The most significant historical events are listed to describe the tremendous growth the University has experienced since its humble beginnings in the quonset huts in the village of Mongmong. Additionally, key leaders are identified to recognize those who have helped to create the dynamic institution that it is today.

The Society of Emeritus Professors acknowledges Roy T. Tsuda for editing the revisions, as completed by John Beamer.

The Society of Emeritus Professors and Retired Scholars

The Society of Emeritus Professors and Retired Scholars utilizes retired personnel in the areas of teaching, research, professional and public services to promote the continued growth of the University, to restore and preserve its history and to honor those leaders who have made the institution what it is today.

Jose R. Palomo, granted the title "Founding Father of the University of Guam" by the University's Board of Regents in 1985. Dr. Palomo's motto was an old Spanish proverb "El que no se atreve no cruza el mar." He who does not venture forth does not cross the sea.

"Early in 1951, as I became better acquainted with the Department of Education and its problems, a thought began to gestate in my mind about how to maintain current educational levels but at a more reasonable cost. Why not train young Guamanians locally so that they could reach teaching standards equal to those in mainland schools?"

Jose R. Palomo, Recollections of the Olden Days
January 6, 1898 - December 17, 1995

The idea of training teachers locally soon became clear to Dr. Palomo shortly after his appointment as Director of Education. He approached Governor Carlton Skinner with the idea; with the Governor's approval he went to the Legislative Committee on Education in early 1951. After consideration of the plan the Committee agreed to the idea but could only fund $15,000, a rather large appropriation for that time. In July 1952 the Governor authorized a supplementary expenditure from a contingent fund for five additional members of the staff bringing the beginning financial contribution to $45,000.

In September 1951 Dr. Palomo left for the States to find an institution that would assist him in his project. He first contacted the Director of Extension Courses at the University of California in Berkeley where he was told that they would be unable to participate because they were heavily involved in a project in South Korea.

His second stop was with the Director of Extension Services at New York University. Again he was refused because they were fully engaged in Puerto Rico.

His third and final planned contact was with the Dean of the College of Education at Ohio State University. Here he found a very positive reception. Dean Donald P. Cottrell said that one of their faculty members had recently retired and would be an excellent choice to start the project. Dr. Palomo then went to Florida to meet Dr. Erwin "Hi" Lewis who was living there in retirement and who was ready to leave for Guam the next day.

On March 26, 1952 an agreement was signed with Ohio State which would cooperate in the development of an educational program at the college level for the preparation of elementary school teachers and would assist in the evaluation and modification of the program as it developed. Ohio State would send one administrator at a time for a five year period who would serve under the Director of Education as a Coordinator of Teacher Education and Higher Education. The chief Administrator was called "Coordinator" by Ohio State; however, on Guam he was called "Dean." Ohio State also promised to send a minimum of five faculty members to insure the beginning of an academic program.

The Territorial College of Guam was originally located in the village of Mongmong.

In 1952 the Territorial College of Guam was established by the authority of the Governor of Guam, the Guam Legislature, and the Board of Education. The College initially functioned primarily as a two-year teacher training institution within the Department of Education. Located on the George Washington High School campus in Mongmong, the College offered A.A. degree programs in elementary education and liberal arts, and non-credit courses in vocational education. In 1952 Ohio State University was contracted to provide administrative and teaching staff for the College.

Full-day class schedules were initiated in 1953. In 1958 construction of a new campus began at the present-day location in the village of Mangilao; in 1959 the College received accreditation from the Western Association of Schools and Colleges.

Student enrollment in 1952 peaked at 190. By 1959 enrollment increased to 576. Graduates of the Associate's program included three during academic year 1952-53, seven in 1953-54, six in 1954-55, 13 in 1955-56, and 27 in 1956-57. During the first year of instruction six professors and one administrator taught at the College; by the end of the decade the number had risen to eighteen Faculty and thirty-seven Part Time.

Administration

During the first decade of the College of Guam the Director of Education for Guam was responsible for the development of the institution, serving as the Ex-Officio President. The Director appointed a Dean who was the first administrative and supervisory officer of the College. The first four Deans were sent by Ohio State University in an agreement reached with the Director of Education. On April 1, 1957 the agreement with Ohio State ended; after this full administrative control of the College was local. The first faculty members for the Summer Session of 1952 were administrators and faculty within the Department of Education. The first four regular faculty members and a Registrar from Ohio State arrived in September of 1952 in time to begin the first full-time program of higher public education on Guam since the closing of Adelup Point Normal School in 1947. Gradually a small core of contract faculty was hired; from this rank came the first administrators. The first academic units were curriculums which became divisions in 1958.

Faculty

All the people listed as Administrators, including the Dean, were primarily faculty members. The small number of faculty and students made this necessary.

The first faculty member arrived from Ohio State in September 1952 with two year contracts.

William L. Carter - Education and Mathematics

Lawrence E. Giles - Education and History

Charles S. Hansen - Education and Science

Lorraine Wood - English

Eldon B. Sessions who was already on island as a Consultant on Island Survey also taught Education.

In 1954 the second group from Ohio State arrived.

J. La Var Bateman

L.C. Breen

Morris E. Harvey

Dan H. Lomax

Alta McWilliams

Since the contract with Ohio State was to expire on April 1, 1957, it was quite evident that steps had to be taken immediately to hire and retain faculty. Dean Hanna in his report of June 21, 1956 to Ohio State said "When you have 100% turnover in staff every two years, the College is bound to suffer."

Of the ten original faculty only Morris Harvey was to extend his time and remain until his death in 1966. His wife, Pauline, was to continue teaching in the Art Department until her retirement when she became Professor Emerita in 1978, the first faculty member to be given the title.

On February 1, 1956 Dr. Pedro C. Sanchez joined the faculty to teach in Social Science and became the first locally hired professor. He was to become the first local Dean of the College and the second President of the University of Guam.

Joining the faculty in Academic Year 1956-57 were three faculty members who were to remain at the institution for several years and who with President Sanchez and the Harveys were to make very significant contributions to its development.

James G. Cooper in Psychology was to become Chairman of the Division of Education and Psychology until 1962.

Harm Harms in Business Education was to become Chairman of the Division of Business and Acting Dean until 1966.

His wife, Pauline, served as Registrar from 1956 to 1964.

George Perdew in Science and Mathematics was to serve in seven different administrative positions until his departure in 1975.

Joining the group above in September 1957 was Andrew Shook who was to serve in five administrative positions including Academic Vice President. Upon his retirement he became Professor Emeritus in 1977. His wife, Rosalie better know as "Rush", was a member of the English Department for many years and became Professor Emerita in English.

The decade of the 60's served as the setting for significant development of the College of Guam. The College relocated to the village of Mangilao; it became a four-year degree granting institution; a nursing program was added to the curriculum; Public Law 7-66 granted autonomy from the Department of Education and created a five-member Board of Regents; and the Guam Legislature established the Micronesian Area Research Center. In 1968 Governor Manuel F.L. Guerrero signed Public Law 9-233 to rename the institution the University of Guam. Additionally, the institution acquired accreditation for the maximum five-year period from the Western Association of Schools and Colleges. By the mid-60's faculty housing was completed in Dean's Circle; and during the late 60's, the Library, Fine Arts, and Science buildings were completed.

In 1967 three undergraduate schools (School of Arts and Sciences, School of Education and School of Continuing Education) and a graduate school were established.

During the academic year 1960-61, enrollment reached 1,040 and by the end of the decade enrollment peaked with 1,843 undergraduate and 140 graduate students. In order to accommodate the number of students at the University there were over one hundred instructors and professors employed.

The decade of the 70's featured further development as the University's facilities included three newly built dormitories, a Health-Science Building and a new Library. In June, 1972 the University of Guam was designated a land-grant institution by an act of the United States Congress and in 1974, in compliance with the University's new status, the Board of Regents approved the creation of a College of Agriculture and Life Sciences. Public Law 13-194, also known as the Higher Education Act of 1976, established the University as an autonomous, non-membership, non-profit corporation under the control of a nine-member Board of Regents.

Enrollment continued to increase as 3,068 full-time and part-time students attended the University during the Fall semester of 1971; by the Fall semester of 1979 enrollment increased to 3,600. Degrees granted during the decade included 117 Associate's and Bachelor's degrees and 63 Master's degrees in 1971; by 1979 the number of undergraduate degrees earned increased to 243; and 51 Master's degrees were bestowed. Accreditation was reaffirmed in 1974 and 1978.

Dr. Pedro C. Sanchez served as President of the University from 1970-74.

“By quality education I mean the preparation that is needed to survive and to prosper in the world of competition which is all around us. It is our business to help our students prepare for the competitive challenges which are inescapable in the modern world...There is only one way to go and that is forward.”

The Field House (upper right corner), which opened during the 1980's, is a multi-use facility encompassing 70,500 square feet with a seating capacity of 5,000.

During the 1980's the University continued to become more independent as Public Law 17-55 provided further autonomy for the institution and established staggered terms for members of the Board of Regents.

In 1988 the Board of Regents approved the articles of incorporation and by-laws for the University of Guam Endowment Foundation. The UOG Endowment Foundation serves as an organization to receive contributions in support of University projects and programs which are not traditionally funded by the Government of Guam. The UOG Endowment Foundation is managed by a Board of Directors that consists of five Board of Regents appointees and four community representatives.

Expansion of the institution's facilities continued as plans for the initiation of Phase I of the five-stage Physical Master Plan were set into motion for additions and renovations to the Robert F. Kennedy Library, the Micronesian Area Research Center and the Computer Center. Public-Law 19-40 granted the University permission to direct tuition income towards the completion of the Physical Master Plan.

In the Spring of 1980 enrollment peaked with 4,485 full-time and part-time students. At the end of the decade 364 degrees were conferred including 207 undergraduate degrees and 40 graduate degrees. Accreditation was reaffirmed in 1988.

We (UOG) exist because we are committed to the development of the mind, and that is what education is all about. We build academic structures for the purpose of supporting intellectual development.

The newly built College of Agriculture and Life Sciences Building was completed in 1997.

The 90's have been years of physical expansion in addition to expansion in the areas of enrollment, academic programs, faculty, and staff.

Student population increased over the years and set yearly records. In the fall of 1990 full-time enrollment figures were greater than 2000 and had reached nearly 4000 by 1993. The University offered degrees in thirty-two undergraduate areas of study and in eleven disciplines leading to a Master's degree.

The Board of Regents adopted a new academic plan and a new fiscal master plan as the University made strides to accommodate the higher demand for post-secondary education.

The 1992 dedication of the new Learning Resources Center marks the completion of the first phase of the 5 stage, 7 year physical master plan. The Learning Resources Center is the new home of the Micronesian Area Research Center, the Computer Center, the Center for Continuing Education and Outreach Programs, Emeritus Hall, and the expanded and renovated Robert F. Kennedy Library. In 1994 the new College of Education building was completed while the construction of the future College of Arts and Sciences and College of Agriculture and Life Sciences buildings began. To date, all of the structures have been completed and the fall semester of 1997 is the first year that all buildings are open and ready for use.

"I strongly believe that the University of Guam holds the key to the future of our territory of Guam and our neighboring islands. That was why I agreed to chair the UOG Foundation and committed a $100,000 donation.

The Foundation is charged with the responsibility of raising funds to expand and improve the facilities and the quality of services at the University where our future leaders can be better trained to lead and manage our affairs into the future. It is incumbent upon all of us to support the Foundation by direct cash donation or in-kind gifts so that the University will be able to fulfill its mission, a mission that cannot be compromised."

Title

At Commencement exercises in 1985 Dr. Jose R. Palomo was given an Honorary Degree as Doctor of Humane Letters and was granted by the Board of Regents the title "Founding Father of the University of Guam". No one would disagree with the title since the idea of training teachers on Guam so they could reach Mainland standards was clearly his. There is considerable evidence to show, however, that the idea was shared by other educational leaders, especially Simon Sanchez and Agueda Johnston. He was the one who traveled to the Mainland to meet with college officials in California, New York and Ohio. Shortly after his return to Guam on March 25, 1952 a five year agreement was signed with the Dean of Education at Ohio State which would provide the first administrators and faculty for the College of Guam. In September 1952 Dr. Palomo resigned as Director of Education and returned to the States, leaving his idea to be developed by other educators and government leaders.

In a letter dated March 20, 1954 which Dr. Palomo wrote to Mrs. Agueda Johnston he stated his reason for leaving Guam after such a short stay. He left because of "family problems which could not be solved at a distance and which required years to work out and much patience". He also stated that "We all have inner compulsions which we have to obey to some degree in order to live at peace with ourselves. My coming to Guam was one of those. I knew the sacrifices demanded of me, but I came nevertheless. Thus I have gained a little peace of mind."

Although the college had its official beginning in the Summer 1952 session, the program was in reality the regular up-grading for DOE elementary teachers with classes taught by DOE personnel. The college faculty from Ohio State arrived in September to begin the Fall Quarter.

One of the most frequent reasons given for the difficulty of getting changes and improvements made on Guam was the frequent turnover of Governors and DOE Directors. Military governors remained for only a few months and Directors did not last much longer. It is almost ironic that at the time the College was beginning there was considerable stability in political and educational leadership.

The Governor in 1952 was Carlton Skinner, a civilian appointee. He readily accepted Dr. Palomo's proposal for a higher education program for elementary teacher training and urged him to go to the Legislature for approval and funding. When the Legislature was able to approve only $15,000, which was considered a large appropriation at that time, the Governor managed to find additional money from a contingent fund which brought the total to $45,000. At the 1968 University Commencement Governor Skinner was given an Honorary Doctorate of Laws which testified to his many contributions to Guam and to the University.

Also reversing the short tenure of DOE Directors was the fact that two Directors were to serve from 1953 to 1963. John S. Haitema came to Guam in 1953 and served until 1957. John R. Trace served from 1957 to 1962. Haitema was frequently given credit and praise in the reports which the first four College Deans sent to Ohio State. Two other local leaders, who also served for long periods of time, played very significant roles in the development of the College. Paul Souder was Chairman of the Board of Education, which was responsible for the direction of the College, from 1953 to 1961. The local person most frequently mentioned in the Dean's reports was Agueda I. Johnston, Assistant Superintendent of DOE from 1946 to 1955. Since most of the students in the beginning years were public school teachers, she was extremely instrumental in many areas, especially in scheduling, funding and scholarships. Most of the first students were females who were also wives and mothers so there were many ways in which Mrs. Johnston was involved. The University twice honored her with degrees, in 1968 with a Bachelor of Community Service and in 1976 with a Doctorate of Humane Letters.

The College was also very fortunate in the stable and intelligent leadership provided by Dr. Donald P. Cottrell, Dean of the College of Education at Ohio State University. He was to remain as Dean during the early years while the College was in the Quonsets at George Washington High School to the move to the new campus in Mangilao where he gave the Dedication Day Address on July 1, 1960.

Dean Cottrell was the administrator who welcomed Dr. Palomo at Ohio State and in their first meeting reacted very positively and even suggested the best person to be the first administrator for the College. Although there was a Committee within the College of Education faculty that supervised and advised the first four Deans, the selection of the Coordinators, as they were known at Ohio State, was made by the Dean. His selections were very astute for the particular skills and experiences which they brought as well as their abilities to relate to and accept local practices and conditions. Again the College was particularly fortunate that Dr. Cottrell was Dean when Dr. Palomo arrived and remained in that position during the formative years of the College.

One of the sources for this information about the beginning of the University is in the UOG Vertical File in MARC called "Basic Assumptions on which the Territorial College of Guam was Established." There is no author listed; however, the language and style seem very similar to other writings of Dr. Palomo.

Dr. Erwin E. "Hi" Lewis, the first Dean from Ohio State, arrived June 11, 1952. The first classes were during the "twilight" hours from 3:30 to 9:30. Although these hours are not in the strict definition of twilight, they are probably accurate. George Washington closed at 3:20 and college classes began after that.

According to "Basic Assumptions" one purpose in establishing a college for teacher training was that with very little or no additional funds, two years of general education could be offered before granting subsidies for off-island study. So from the very beginning there was an awareness that sending students off-island at government expense was far more costly than educating as many as possible on island.

Leonard O. Andrews, the second Dean, arrived January 3, 1953 and left June 13, 1954. He was the Chairman of the faculty committee which worked out the original proposal and which provided advice during the first year. He was the most prolific writer of the group.

In Andrews' first report of February 3, 1953 he said the College was approved on January 30, 1953 for the education of Veterans; this was another early priority. The budget for that year was $100,000+. His top priorities, some of which still remain, were a Director of Education who was able, well-trained and experienced; a good Business Manager for DOE, the largest island employer; an expert in modern education; and making the best use of the facilities for the College and DOE.

In the next report of April 13, 1953 he announced the arrival of John Haitema as Director which was to provide a solution to the top priority of his previous letter. Another ongoing problem was illegal immigrants, mostly Filipinos.

On September 21, 1953 he told about the success of the Summer Session and the first day-time classes in the Fall with local businesses providing tuition for twelve students. Thirty-three students enrolled in the first day program and "as many as half were really ready for college."

Many items in his report sound very familiar at the present time. The teacher of piano was too much of a perfectionist and offended many Guamanians who dropped out. Typhoon Rita ruined a couple days of classes. Liberation Day celebrations were held on campus and "killed" two more days. Vocational education was basically high school degree courses with many of the students being Veterans; he was willing to offer elementary level courses if necessary.

There was already talk about a four year college. His top priorities were in 1953 to bring the library up to respectability and an elementary education professor; for 1954 to bring the science labs up to respectability and a business professor.

In the report of October 12, 1953 he listed six problems which the College faced. First, publicizing the facts about the College was very difficult since there were very limited means for contacting a large segment of the people. Also many people were not aware of the difference between the College program and the in-service programs for DOE.

Second, encouraging young people to take advantage of the opportunities here before going to the States was closely related to the first problem.

Third, most of the facilities were inadequate, especially in library and the science labs.

Fourth, pre-service and in-service education for elementary teachers, especially in the teaching of English, was inadequate.

Fifth, a center was needed for the preservation of information and materials about Guam.

Sixth, teachers needed to be encouraged to make use of local materials and facts in school programs.

On January 21, 1954 Andrews reported that the Vocational School had been divided, with the day program going to GW and the night program remaining as part of the College. The four original purposes of the College now had some students- Elementary Teacher Education, a two year General Academic college, Terminal Education, chiefly of a vocational nature, and General Adult Education.

He included the information that the successful inauguration of the day program for Freshman had 35 students; an addition to the faculty of four part-time instructors, who were local secondary teachers, had been made; and the first Chamorro instructor, Monsignor Calvo, had been hired.

By the time Andrews left he had secured twelve institutions of listing that would accept credits from the College. He considered this very liberal since records were very poorly kept and many of the first graduates started with credits from some of the earlier DOE programs.

In 1969 Andrews revisited Guam where he found the relations between UOG and DOE "terribly bad." On his return to the States he wrote a long letter about the early years of the College to George Perdew who had indicated a responsibility to record the early history. On March 17, 1974 Perdew gave his letter to MARC. In the letter Andrews' information does not agree with that of Palomo and others; perhaps his memory was not accurate. He did however make a very interesting observation- "I never felt badly that Ohio State did not get more credit in the eyes of the people, because we got the job done. The attitude of the people I worked with in 1953-54 and saw in 1969 was all the assurance I needed that our efforts were appreciated by them."

Andrews left Guam on June 13, 1954 and Eldon B. Sessions, the third Dean, arrived shortly before that date. In his letter of October 11, 1954 to Ohio State, Sessions said that "Things here are much better than I expected." General conditions were much better than when he was here before. He had been on Guam as an Instructor during the Autumn Quarter of 1952, the first term of college instruction. He had been on island for another purpose and taught part time.

Sessions' correspondence to Ohio State on November 30, 1954 included the much hoped for information that Andrews had developed a fine relationship with the people. Good relations with those in DOE, the government, and the people, in general, had been a priority from the beginning. The work Andrews, Haitema and others did on the certification requirements increased interest in teacher training.

In his report of January 7, 1955 Sessions said, "We are very much concerned with the fact that many teachers are trying to get certified, instead of getting educated to teach." The Ohio Committee again brought up the problem of accreditation, but Sessions advised them to "go slow" since Haitema was working on high school accreditation and we should not "get ahead of him," Talk was already beginning about changing from a quarter to a semester system.

The report for Fall and Winter Quarters 1954-55 was sent on March 17, 1955. The Quonset had recently been remodeled and now had adequate lighting, acoustic ceilings and good color schemes. In describing the performance of Miss Pangelinan, the Registrar, Mrs. Burgoon, the Librarian, and Mrs. Smith, the office secretary, he rather chauvinistically stated, "These girls will compare well to stateside colleges." He also reported that this quarter it had not been advisable to offer a course in Merizo.

On October 1, 1955 Dean Cottrell informed Sessions that he had completed arrangements for J. Marshall Hanna, who had extensive experience in Vocational Education, to accept the appointment of Dean until April 1, 1957 when the initial agreement ended.

Considerable correspondence at the end of 1955 and the beginning of 1956 dealt with a difference of opinion concerning the end of Sessions' contract with Dean Cottrell having a different interpretation. Sessions thought his contract ended on October 1, 1955; actually he was to stay until February 1956. Primarily the delayed departure was due to the difficulty which Hanna had in getting military and Government of Guam approval for his travel. Since the College was still a part of DOE, most of the official government arrangements were made by the Director. On December 12, 1955 Sessions wrote to Hanna "Do not feel too concerned with bringing a lot of books. After eighteen months on Guam, books are of little value."

J. Marshall Hanna did not arrive until the early part of 1956. On June 21, 1956 he reported to Cottrell that approximately one-third of the high school graduates of the June Commencement have made application for admission to the College in the Fall. The introduction of a business and vocational program was the major factor in this increase. Persuading local high school graduates to first attend the College of Guam had been an important goal from the beginning.

"I have received excellent cooperation from Dr. Haitema, the Board and, in general, everyone. Some of the antagonism which Andy and Sessions experienced appears to have abated and there seems to be growing realization that the Legislature wishes to develop as strong a College here as conditions permit." Both the two previous Deans had reported lack of success in the area of cooperation; now this seemed to be resolved.

One concern which still remained for Hanna to try to resolve was the problem of staffing. During the first four years of the College's history there had been two complete turnovers of faculty and even more of Deans. Hanna did not think this problem could be resolved until there was some form of more or less permanent staff. Within the next two to three years this problem was also to be resolved.

In 1956 courses were being offered at the Anderson Air Force Extension Center, the Naval Station Extension Center and the Adult-Vocational Program. A fairly large number of off-campus courses were being offered in the early years of the College.

After the completion of the first agreement with Ohio State a second was reached to cover the period of June 15, 1957 to July 1, 1960. The two main points of the agreement were that a permanent Dean would be employed and that Ohio State would send consultant/advisors for a three month period, two at a time for the first year and after that one. Dr. Pedro Sanchez became the first local Dean.

In the annual report of June 1, 1958 to May 30, 1959 was the announcement that the Western College Association had fully accredited the College. It was also significant enough to be included that three professors were the first to renew their contracts- Harm Harms, James G. Cooper and George Perdew. There were eighteen faculty members and thirty-seven part time.
